Bhagat Singh, born on 27th September in Khatkar Kalan, Punjab, hailed from a family deeply ingrained in the fight for India's independence. His father, Kishan Singh, was a notable freedom fighter. Bhagat Singh received his education at D A V School in Lahore, where he developed a strong sense of nationalism and fervour for independence. He became a member of the 'Hindustan Republican Association' and quickly rose to prominence for his active involvement in the freedom struggle. Bhagat Singh's popularity stemmed from his unwavering dedication and courage in fighting against British colonial rule, making him an enduring symbol of India's struggle for freedom.

Q.VIII

32.

Once upon a time, there lived a farmer who had three sons. Despite their father's constant admonitions, the sons were always at odds with each other, quarrelling over trivial matters. Concerned about their behaviour and wanting to impart a valuable lesson, the farmer devised a plan. One day, he called his sons together and handed them a tightly bound bundle of sticks. He challenged them to break the bundle, but try as they might, none of the sons could break the sticks while they remained tied together. Frustrated, the sons looked to their father for guidance. Sensing a teaching moment, the farmer advised them to untie the bundle and break the sticks individually. To their surprise, each son easily snapped the sticks into pieces. The farmer then imparted the moral of the story: "United we stand, divided we fall." He explained that just like the bundle of sticks, they were stronger together as a family, but when divided, they were easily broken. From that day forward, the sons understood the importance of unity and cooperation, vowing to work together as a cohesive unit, honouring their father's wisdom.

Q.IX

33.

In the garden, children frolic freely, their laughter blending with the rustle of leaves and the chirping of birds. They chase each other with gleeful abandon, their boundless energy propelling them through the lush greenery. Some children swing on the swings, while others build sandcastles in the sandbox, their imaginations soaring. Underneath the warm sun, friendships blossom as they share toys and stories, creating cherished memories that will last a lifetime. In this magical haven, the innocence of childhood reigns supreme, casting a spell of joy and wonder over all who enter.

The poem celebrates India's age-old customs and traditions, emphasizing their positive impact worldwide.

Q.XIII

37. a) Air Pollution

Introduction:

Air pollution, a significant environmental concern, stems from various sources such as industrial emissions, vehicular exhaust, and agricultural activities.

It poses severe health risks, including respiratory illnesses, cardiovascular diseases, and premature death. Furthermore, air pollution contributes to environmental degradation, acid rain formation, and climate change. To address this issue, stringent regulations on emissions, promotion of renewable energy sources, and adoption of sustainable transportation methods are crucial. Additionally, public awareness campaigns and individual actions, such as reducing energy consumption and minimizing vehicle use, play pivotal roles in mitigating air pollution and safeguarding human health and the environment.

Conclusion:

Air pollution harms people and the environment. We can help by using clean energy and following regulations. It's important for a healthier future.
