Q.V

9) The poem "Grandma Climbs a Tree" is written by Ruskin Bond. It tells the story of Ruskin Bond's grandmother, who had an unusual habit of climbing trees. Even at the age of sixty-two, she could quickly climb trees, a skill she learned from her brother when she was six.

She preferred being in a tree to using a lift. Although her neighbors advised her to stop climbing trees in her old age and live gracefully, she ignored their advice.

One day, she climbed a tree but couldn't get down. After being rescued, the doctor recommended a week of bed rest, which she hated. Once she recovered, she asked for a house on a tree top. Her son and the poet built it for her. Granny happily spent the rest of her life in her tree top house, enjoying her unique gift of living close to nature.
